Biosimilarity	“No clinically meaningful differences.” Info showing “highly similar molecular structural features” also needed. Based upon non-clinical studies and any necessary clinical studies or other safety studies. The need for any of these studies is at the FDA’s discretion. Any clinical studies should be designed to avoid duplicative and unethical clinical testing.	“Highly similar to the reference product.” Requires non-clinical studies, animal studies, and clinical studies, including an assessment of immunogenicity. The FDA may waive one or more if these requirements if they are unnecessary, but the clinical assessment of immunogenicity can only be waived if the FDA publishes a guidance supported by data.	Not applicable to biologics. As to small molecule drugs, requires the same active ingredient, plus a showing of bioequivalence.
Pioneer Exclusivity	5 years for a new biologic, 3 years for a supplemental indication or subpopulation, with possible 6 month extensions.	Minimum of 12 years, up to 14.5 years.	5 years for a new chemical entity; 3 years for supplemental indication or subpopulation; 6 additional months for pediatric exclusivity.
Generic Exclusivity	180 days generally but potentially sooner based on the course of patent litigation, awarded to first product to be found interchangeable.	2 years awarded to first product to be found interchangeable.	180 days subject to forfeiture, awarded to first to file.
Patent Listings/Notifications	Upon a request of a generic applicant at any time, pioneer must provide a notification of all relevant patents to which it has rights to.	After generic applicant discloses information about its product, pioneer discloses a list of relevant patents. Third parties may also provide notice of their patent rights.	FDA Orange Book.
